Dear Sirs/Madams,

January 15, 2002

I truly believe that the Microsoft workers have intended, in their labors, no malice to any via the software-items of their manufacture. It is just as true that anybody's computer-software is not harmful and is non-malignant. Were it lawful, it would, according to definition (of the word), be full of law. Might it have its own autonomy then, I ask? Also, might I query as to whether there is, maybe not as yet known, such a thing as the Department of Liberty to conjunct with the Department of Justice? Liberty and justice for all in re the Pledge of Allegiance.

In my judgment, the Microsoft group is innocent and God bless them, I say.

Sincerely from Geoffrey Doman
